INTRODUCTION

Due to the close-knit nature of our society, which is keen on presenting its members in the best possible way, many choose to conceal certain illnesses affecting their relatives, especially when these illnesses impact their behavior or judgment. Therefore, the idea of establishing the Saudi Alzheimer's Disease Association (SADA) emerged to break the barrier of silence and embarrassment, shedding light on the aspects surrounding the disease to raise public awareness in a way that serves both patients and their families. SADA also aims to engage decision-makers in understanding the various dimensions of the disease, its impact, and treatment costs, ultimately providing the necessary care and attention for both patients and those concerned with their well-being. Hence, SADA was founded in 1430H (2009 CE).

Why was the Saudi Alzheimer's Disease Association established?

The idea to establish SADA was born from a group of devoted women whose parents had been affected by Alzheimer's disease. Their journey began with a search for others who shared their concern and passion for the cause. United by a common purpose, forty-five dedicated sons and daughters of this nation came together to take the initiative. Their collective efforts led to the official approval by the Ministry of Human Resources and Social Development, marking the formal establishment of the Saudi Alzheimer's Disease Association.
